Opening of the new Geneva boutique

CHAPTER I

The spirit of the house

SLIDES 01 — 04

A house born of exchange

From 1837 to 1841, Ferdinand Adolph Lange trains in the great centres of precision watchmaking: near Paris with Joseph Thaddäus Winnerl, a pupil of Breguet, then in Switzerland and London. He brings back the metric system and the plan for a Saxon manufacture, which he founds in Glashütte in 1845.

> “Don't forget your home! It will welcome you back with open arms if you come back one day, rich in experience.”
>
> GUTKAES, IN HIS APPRENTICE'S TRAVELLING BOOK · A. LANGE & SÖHNE [5]

WHAT THIS SHOWS

Lange was founded on an exchange: seek out the best knowledge in Europe and transform it in Glashütte. It has been its method from the start.

Receiving and giving

RECEIVING

1930

Richard Lange, the founder's son, is 84. He reads an article by two Siemens engineers and turns it into a patent: a beryllium alloy for balance springs.

GIVING

Nivarox

The invention is taken up in Switzerland under the name Nivarox. This balance spring is used today in most quality mechanical watches.

BRINGING TOGETHER

1990

Walter Lange re-founds the house in Glashütte with Günter Blümlein, who came from Swiss watchmaking: Saxon knowledge and Swiss experience meet.

WHAT THIS SHOWS

At Lange, exchange runs both ways: the house receives, transforms, and gives back to all of watchmaking. An exchange between equals.

Every boutique speaks its city

Lisbon, June 2026. On Avenida da Liberdade, the new boutique's reception is paved with calçada portuguesa, hand-laid in a fan pattern: the house sees in it an echo of the perlage on its plates.

London, December 2025. On Old Bond Street, the lounge takes up the spirit of the Mayfair clubs, and the house recalls its “historical ties” with the city, where its founder trained.

WHAT THIS SHOWS

A Lange boutique is not a standard showcase: it takes root in its city and sets a local craft in dialogue with Glashütte's.

Three foundations

01

Exchange as a method

Since 1837, the house has sought out the best knowledge wherever it is, and transformed it in Glashütte.

02

Between equals

It receives and it gives: what it learns in turn feeds all of watchmaking.

03

Local roots

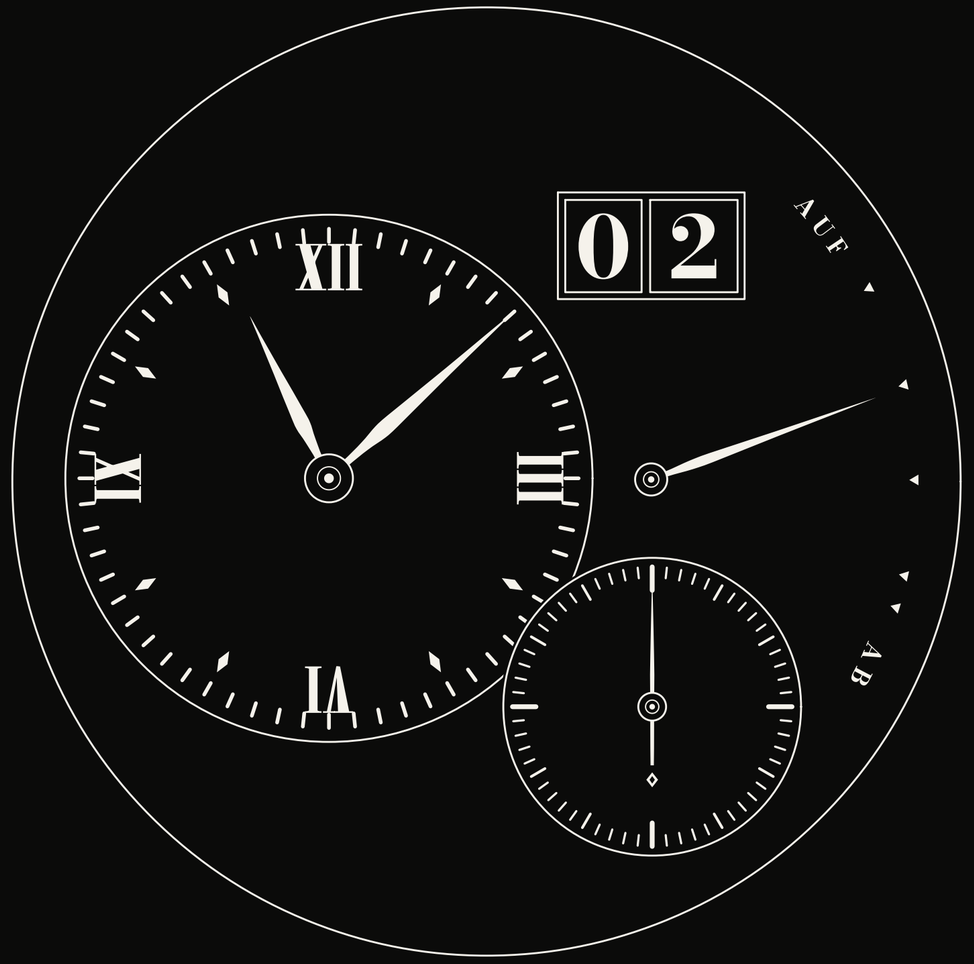

Every boutique enters into dialogue with its city and its crafts.

For Geneva, the question becomes: what story does the house share with this city?

6 May 1927

"The general partnership A. Lange & Söhne [...], in Glashütte (Saxony), has established a branch in Plainpalais [...]. Line of business: manufacture, purchase and sale of watches and supplies. Premises: 25, Avenue du Mail."

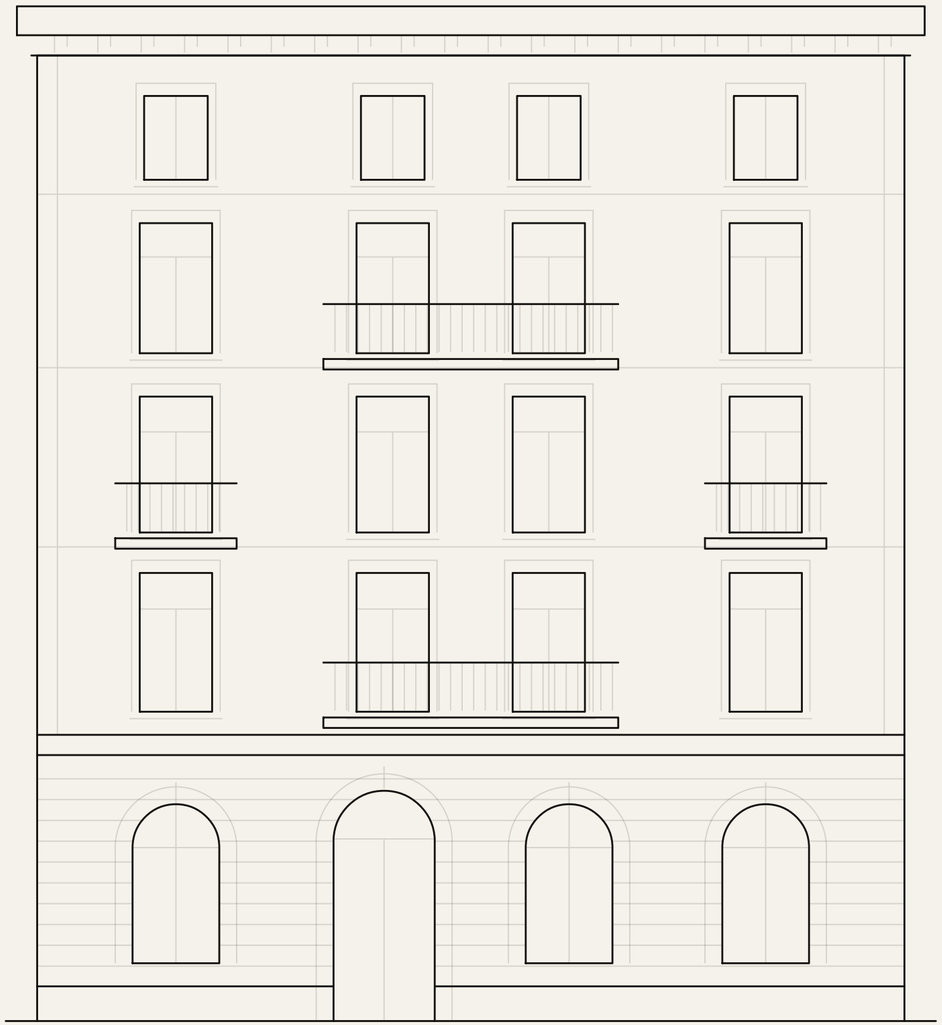

ETH-Bibliothek, e-periodica.ch [1] · translated from the French

25, Avenue du Mail

The branch is the work of the third generation: Adolf-Otto, Wilhelm-Rudolf and Hans-Gerhard Lange, the founder's grandsons. They entrust its management to a man from Neuchâtel living in Petit-Saconnex, Paul Piaget, originally from Les Bayards.

Glashütte's management explains the choice of Geneva, “centre of the Swiss watch industry”, by the city's know-how in wristwatches. Manufacture and sales now take place in Switzerland, in Swiss francs.

Glashütte comes to Geneva to learn.

Manufacture des Montres Niton

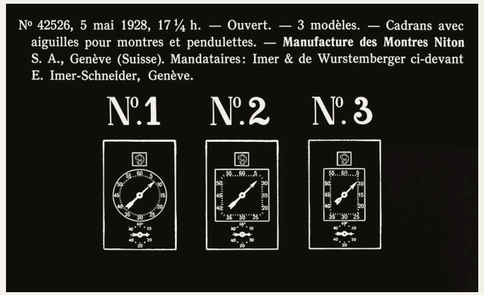

For its first wristwatches, Lange turns to one of the finest manufactures in Geneva, founded in 1919: Niton.

In 1922, it ranks first in the Geneva official inspection; in 1928, it wins a prize at the Geneva chronometry competition. It supplies Cartier, Gübelin and Patek Philippe.

The branch's first watches receive its shaped calibres.

Glashütte / Genf

The branch's watches bear both cities. On the first ones, the Niton movement is engraved “A. Lange & Söhne, Geneva-Swiss, Eighteen Jewels, all Adjustments” and decorated with Geneva stripes.

It is struck with two Geneva Seals, the hallmark the city reserves for its most carefully finished movements.

The movements bear the words “Glashütte & Genf”, the dials “A. Lange & Söhne Genf”.

A few hundred watches

The dispatch ledgers of the Geneva production are kept at the Deutsches Uhrenmuseum in Glashütte. They record 24 watches sold in 1927, 147 in 1928, about 150 in 1929, 49 in 1930 and 116 in 1931, shipped as far as Tokyo.

On 27 April 1929, no. 100118, a green gold watch with a Peseux calibre, goes to Eduard Riemer in Prague for 360 Swiss francs.

Nine years after its entry, the branch is struck off the Geneva commercial register “following its closure”. The Official Gazette publishes it on 16 March 1936.

The house goes on selling wristwatches from Glashütte. Then the war, the expropriation of 1948 and forty years of interruption erase the memory of Geneva.

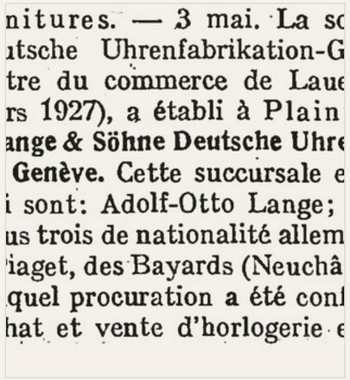

For almost a century, the story is forgotten.

Celebrating the exchange

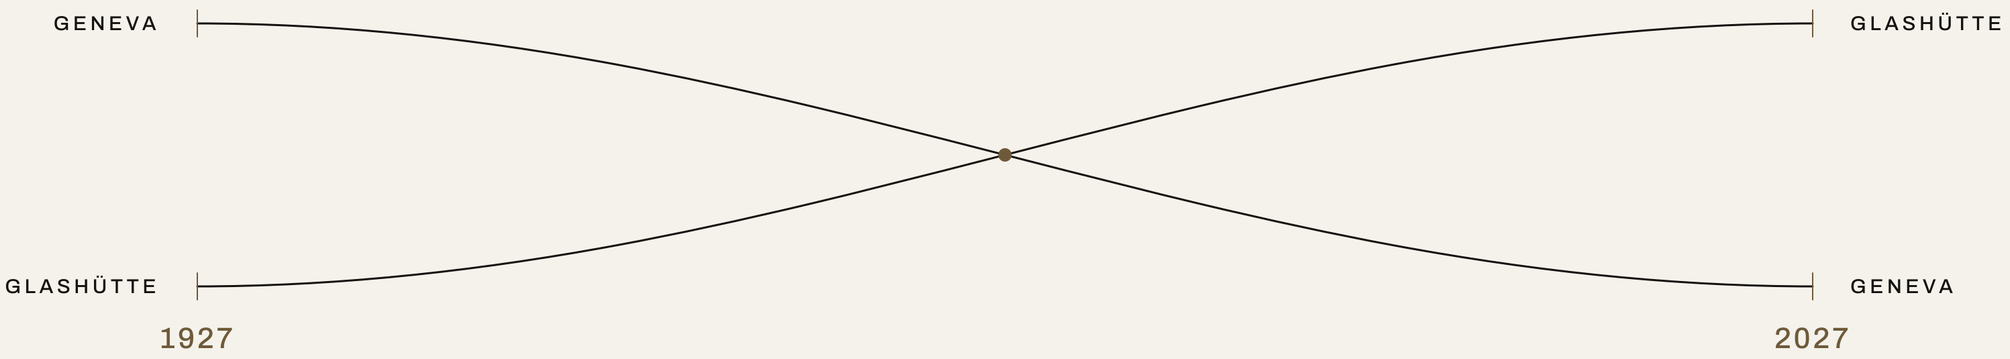

SLIDES 13 — 17

Celebrating the exchange

“In 1927, Geneva opened the doors of its craft to Lange.

A hundred years later, Lange opens the doors of its own to Geneva.”

A house that opens its doors

Since 2021, Lange has received its Geneva clients by appointment in its Salon on Place de Longemalle. On Rue Robert-Céard, the house settles on three floors, with its own watchmaker's workshop.

During the opening days, the boutique opens to five audiences. Each discovers the story of 1927 and experiences an encounter between Glashütte and Geneva.

2021 The Salon, Place de Longemalle · A. Lange & Söhne

2027 Rue Robert-Céard · ALS brief, 14.10.2026

An encounter at every moment

Every moment of the opening brings Glashütte and Geneva together around a watch, a gesture or a table.

01 A watchmaker from the manufacture and a Geneva watchmaker bent over the same 1927 watch.

02 An archive from Geneva and an archive from Glashütte in the same display case.

03 A Geneva chef and a Saxon chef at the stove of the same dinner.

04 A craftsman from the city and a craftsman from the house for the same gift.

The two cities meet there like old friends, as equals.

The whole story, for every guest

Journalists, collectors, prospects, clients and friends of the house do not come at the same time. Yet each receives the whole story: the 1927 story in front of an archive piece, an encounter between the two cities, the discovery of the boutique and the collections, a gift to take home.

MOST PUBLIC — MOST INTIMATE

Only the manner changes, from the most public to the most intimate.

The boutique tells the story

The boutique has just been designed; nothing in it is moved. The story settles into what it already offers: the history wall and the space devoted to Glashütte on the ground floor, the cinema and the multisensory room on the first floor, the workshop and the private salon on the second.

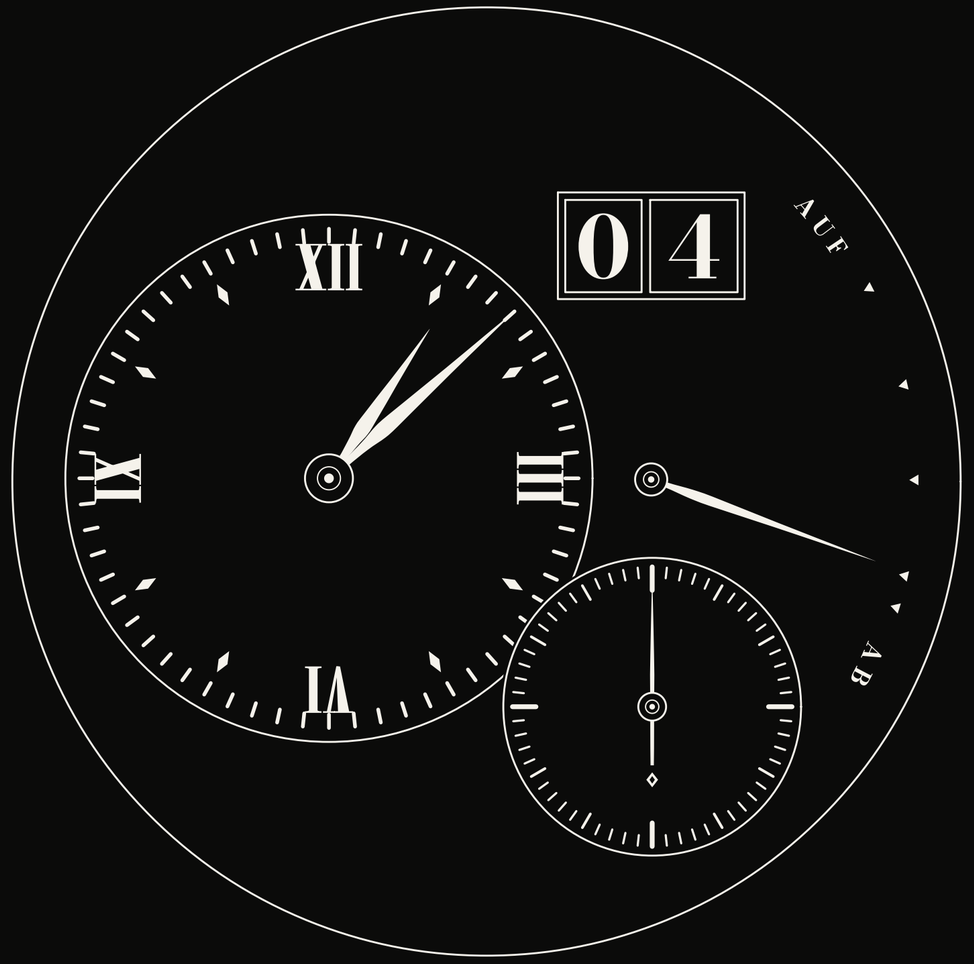

Added to them: a few archive display cases and hosts who know the story.

CHAPTER IV

The programme

SLIDES 18 — 24

Two to three days in Geneva

DAY 1

The first day opens with the press, the CEO's address and the ribbon cutting. The afternoon belongs to the collectors.

DAY 2

The next day, clients and prospects discover the boutique in small groups, from morning to evening.

DAY 3

A third day can extend the visits and host one last dinner.

EVERY EVENING

Every evening, the boutique closes on a dinner of a few covers for the house's closest friends.

The Exchange of Stories

The press discovers the story through its proof. On the ground floor, a display case shows the branch's entry in the Geneva commercial register, held at the State Archives, beside its publication in the Swiss Official Gazette of Commerce of 6 May 1927.

The CEO speaks, then cuts the ribbon. The journalists then tour the boutique in small groups, up to the workshop where the watchmaker awaits them.

The CEO speaks in the entrance hall, before the press, the 1927 case and the ribbon.

The Exchange of Knowledge

Two watchmakers, one watch from 1927. A watchmaker from Lange and a watchmaker from Niton open together a watch signed Glashütte / Genf, fitted a century ago with a Niton calibre. In front of the collectors, they read it aloud: the calibre and its finishing, then what each recognises of his own craft.

The Niton name has been revived in Geneva by a new team. Its presence brings back the signature that equipped the branch's first watches.

Around the workbench, a display case gathers watches from the Geneva period, lent by the house, by collectors or by Geneva auction houses. A Cabaret accompanies them, the rectangular watch that since 1997 has continued the line of the shaped watches of the time.

Cabaret Tourbillon, since 2008 · A. Lange & Söhne

Two watchmakers open a 1927 watch together before the collectors.

The Exchange of Discovery

A first encounter with the house, by hand. In the workshop, the watchmaker sets two movements side by side: a Geneva calibre from the 1920s and a Lange calibre of today, with its three-quarter plate in German silver, the signature of Glashütte.

The visitor learns to tell them apart with the loupe, then tries a watchmaker's gesture on a practice movement. They leave with an invitation to come back and discover the collections at a private appointment.

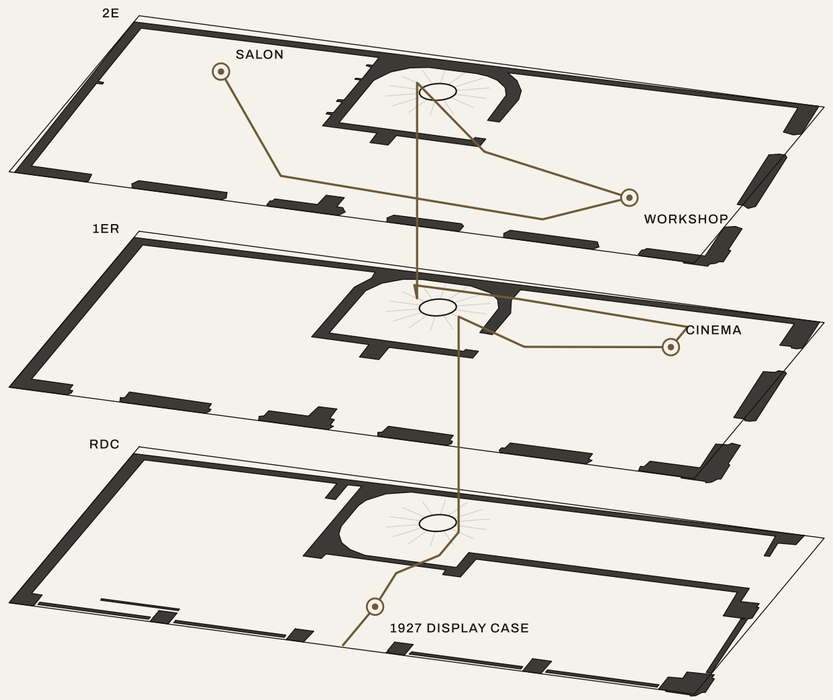

At the bench, a visitor learns to read a movement through the loupe.

The Exchange of Experiences

Clients come in groups of eight to ten, throughout the day. Each visit lasts about forty minutes and follows the thread of the story: the 1927 display case on the ground floor, a short film in the first-floor cinema, then the workshop, where the watchmaker shows his work on a movement in progress.

The visit ends in the salon over a glass of Geneva wine, with an adviser from the house, while the next group goes up to the workshop.

GROUPS OF 8 TO 10 · ABOUT 40 MINUTES

A group of clients in the first-floor cinema, watching an archive film.

The Exchange of Taste

The dinner takes place in the boutique, around a single table of a few covers. It is repeated two or three evenings in a row, so that each guest stays within a very small circle.

In front of each guest lies a Lange watch, old or recent. Through the dinner, the watches pass from hand to hand and the conversation follows them round the table. A master watchmaker presents each piece and tells, from it, what Glashütte and Geneva have passed on to each other.

The menu blends the cuisines of the two cities, prepared four-handed by a Geneva chef and a Saxon chef.

At dinner, the Geneva chef and the Glashütte chef serve together.

Four generations, one journey

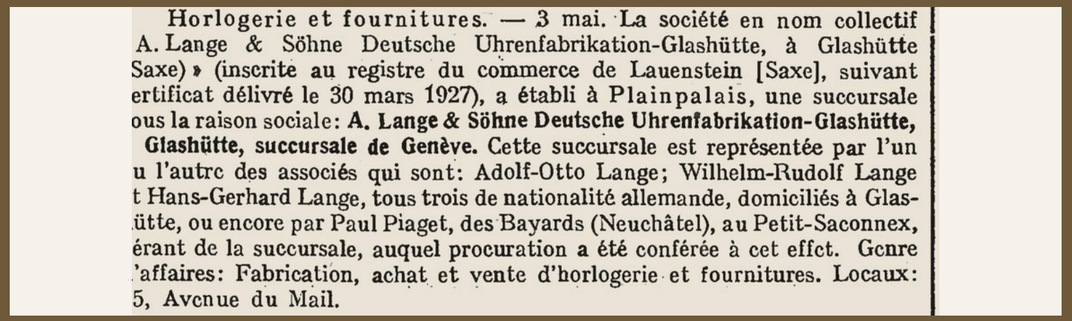

Generation after generation, the house goes elsewhere to find what it lacks, and brings it back to Glashütte.

GENERATION	WHO	WHAT THEY WENT TO FIND ELSEWHERE
1ST GENERATION	Ferdinand Adolph Lange	Paris, Switzerland and London, 1837 to 1841: the precision craft, the metric system and the idea of a manufacture.
2ND GENERATION	Richard and Emil Lange	Paris, where Emil sits on the World Fair jury; materials science, from which Richard's 1930 patent on the beryllium balance spring is born.
3RD GENERATION	Adolf-Otto, Wilhelm-Rudolf and Hans-Gerhard Lange	Geneva, 1927 to 1936: the wristwatch, with Niton and the Geneva suppliers.
4TH GENERATION	Walter Lange (1924-2017)	The watchmaking school of Karlstein, in Austria, from 1941; in 1990, the re-founding with Günter Blümlein.
TODAY	A. Lange & Söhne	Geneva again: the Salon in 2021, the boutique on Rue Robert-Céard in 2027.

Niton, the forgotten manufacture

The branch's Geneva supplier, after Sander Peeters's study.

28 OCT. 1919	Founding of “Jeannet, Morel et Bourquin”, Rue du Mont-Blanc. Morel and Bourquin come from Vacheron Constantin (1908-1916).
10 OCT. 1922	The firm becomes the Manufacture des Montres Niton. First place in the Geneva official inspection ranking.
1927-1929	Niton supplies the first watches of the Lange branch, cases 100008 to 100015.
1928	Prize at the Geneva chronometry competition, with calibre no. 4903.
JULY 1929	Branch in New York, 607 Fifth Avenue.
30 DEC. 1933	Alfred Bourquin, left on his own, retires.
1941	Part of the production rights sold to Ebauches SA; Niton makes movements for Chopard, Rolex and Universal until 1955.
1957-1972	Bought by Sarcar on 4 February 1957, then merged.
TODAY	The name is relaunched in Geneva by a new team, with no corporate continuity.

The Geneva Seal

Established by a Geneva law of 1886, the Geneva Seal distinguishes movements made, assembled and regulated in the canton, inspected against finishing criteria set by the State.

In the 1920s, Niton is among the manufactures submitting the most movements for inspection: from 1921 to 1929, it ranks first or second.

The Niton calibres of the branch's first watches bear two.

Niton shaped calibre, movement no. 4763 · after Stegemann

The Geneva watches, 1927-1936

The branch's first watches use a Niton shaped calibre of 9 × 11 lignes, engraved “A. Lange & Söhne, Geneva-Swiss, Eighteen Jewels, all Adjustments”, decorated with Geneva stripes and struck with two Geneva Seals. The same calibre equipped Patek Philippe watches at the time [3].

No. 100009 has an octagonal tonneau case in green gold, 25 × 37 mm, set off with black enamel. It remained in the same family until 2009 [3].

From no. 100016, the branch sources from Altus, then adopts in 1931 an Altus shaped calibre of 8 ¼ × 12 lignes [3][11][12]. The watches, rectangular or tonneau, are sold under the names Lange-Uhr Glashütte and A. Lange & Söhne Genf [12].

The Cabaret, launched in 1997 with the L931 shaped calibre, continues this line. The Cabaret Tourbillon, born in 2008, had a Handwerkskunst edition of 30 pieces in 2021 and a Honeygold edition in 2026 [11][12].

Prague, 27 April 1929

The house's shipping books record every watch that left Glashütte. Page 0145, 27 April 1929: three gentlemen's wristwatches go to Eduard Riemer, in Prague.

Among them, no. 100118: green gold 0.585 case, 9 ¾-line calibre with 16 jewels, sold for 360 francs.

The invoice is in Swiss francs and payable in Geneva, to the Usine Genevoise de Dégrossissage d'Or: these watches are sold from Switzerland.

WHAT THIS SHOWS

One line in an archive is enough to find a watch again: its number, its buyer, its price and its link with Geneva.

The questions the press will ask

Prepared answers, to be approved by the Maison. They are not on screen during the event.

Did Lange sell Swiss watches under its name?	Yes, from 1927 to 1936, and openly: the watches bear “Genf” or “Geneva-Swiss”. In December 1928, the house even asked its retailers to say they did not have the precision of its pocket watches.
Didn't Lange sue those who combined Swiss movements with the Glashütte name?	Yes, in 1904, against the Union Horlogère. Twenty years later, the pocket-watch crisis forced the house to change strategy; it did so under a separate name, that of its Geneva branch.
Why did the branch close in 1936?	The sources consulted do not say. The house was then coming out of the crisis through public orders, in Glashütte.
Is Paul Piaget, the manager, related to the Piaget house?	No source consulted says so. Do not suggest it.

Five audiences, five formats

AUDIENCE	NUMBER	WHEN	FORMAT	GIFT
Journalists	~30	Day 1, morning	CEO speech, ribbon, visit in small groups	Reproduction of 1927 and history file
Collectors	~10	Day 1, afternoon	Two watchmakers open a 1927 watch	Notebook of the Geneva watches, 1927-1936
Prospects	TO BE SET	Day 2	Two movements side by side, a gesture at the bench	Invitation to a private appointment
Clients	~80	Day 2, groups of 8 to 10	A 40-minute visit, from the case to the salon	Engraved watchmaker's tool, made for the occasion
Friends of the house	10-15	Every evening	Dinner at a single table, four-hands menu	Object made four-handed

The boutique, floor by floor

What the boutique already offers, and what the opening adds. Areas and capacities to be confirmed on the final plans.

FLOOR	EXISTING	DURING THE OPENING	POINT OF ATTENTION
Ground floor	History wall, Glashütte area, reception	The 1927 case, CEO speech, ribbon	Press and client flows, security of the case
First floor	Cinema, multisensory room, salon	Short archive film for client groups	Film length set to the 40-minute rotation
Second floor	Workshop, private salon, 25 m² room	Watchmakers at the bench, collectors' encounter, dinner	Ten to fifteen covers do not fit: capacity or outside venue to decide

From November 2026 to June 2027

Partners to approach

PARTNER	WHAT WE ASK	FOR WHICH MOMENT
Archives d'État de Genève	Access to and reproduction of the 1927 commercial register entry	The 1927 case, press
ETH-Bibliothek, e-periodica	Reproduction rights for the Official Gazette pages, 1927 and 1936	Reproduction given to the press
Deutsches Uhrenmuseum Glashütte	Access to the Geneva dispatch ledgers, loan or facsimile	Display case, collectors' notebook
Niton	A watchmaker present, loan of a period calibre	Collectors' encounter
Dr Helmut Crott, Phillips	Network of collectors of “Lange Genf” watches	Loans for the case
Wolfgang Stegemann, Sander Peeters	Historical review, possible talk	Press kit, notebook
Geneva and Saxon chefs	Four-hands menu	Friends of the house dinner
Geneva craftsman	Engraved or enamelled object, made with a Lange craftsman	Gift for the friends of the house

Points to decide

POINT	WHY	FALLBACK
The 1927 story	Maison approval before any distribution	Keep it for collectors and the specialist press
“First wristwatch delivered”	Klassik Uhren's phrase; sources disagree on no. 100009	Drop it, keep “one of the first”
Niton watchmaker	Niton's agreement and availability	An independent historian beside the Lange watchmaker
Archive loans	Originals at the Archives d'État and the Glashütte museum	Facsimiles
Two chefs	Availability, budget, logistics	One chef, a menu of crossed inspirations
Dinner on the second floor	25 m^2 room, too small for 10 to 15 covers	A nearby outside venue
Third day	Budget, teams, security, CEO's agenda	Two days
